Looking for a Stimulus Job? Check your Cell Phone...

Charlotte, NC start-up creates innovative way to promote stimulus jobs using Twitter

Charlotte, NC, February 27, 2009: We have all heard that stimulus jobs are coming. When and where those jobs will arrive appears to be a mystery – until now. TweetMyJobs.com (<http://www.TweeyMyJobs.com>), a Charlotte, NC start-up has built a sophisticated job distribution system on top of the widely popular online service Twitter, which allows users to send short messages to people's cell phones as a text message. Companies or agencies who are looking to hire can post a job for free through TweetMyJOBS.com, and anyone interested in that type of job will automatically get the job sent to them as a text message. In addition, if it's a job opening that has been created because of the US stimulus package, it will be identified as Stimulus Job and will be featured and headlined on the website.

"President Obama has stated that an estimated 3.5 million jobs will be saved or created by his stimulus package. This service is designed to help get these jobs in the hands of people who need them as quickly as possible," TweetMyJobs.com founder, Gary Zukowski says. "In addition it helps ensure that the agencies or companies hiring for these stimulus jobs provide transparency to the American people. Everyone should have immediate access to these positions."

Zukowski has contacted his United States Representative, Sue Myrick, 9th district, to help promote the site and express his concern that without utilizing a service such as TweetMyJobs.com, many of the promised stimulus jobs may not be made known to every American. "TweetMyJobs.com focuses on all types of job opportunities," Zukowski adds. "The stimulus jobs are unique, however. We want to do our part to get the economy back on track and help people get back to work."
